We published in the New-Year's edition of the Dispatch for January, 1876, a very interesting history of the public schools of the city of Richmond, dating from its inauguration in the year 1869, showing their rapid and solid growth, as also the general popularity of the system, it having brought to its support in the short period of seven years all classes of citizens within the boundaries of the city. The school session of 1875-76 terminated June 15, 1876. All the white schools held their closing exercises at the Richmone Theatre, which was packed from pit to dome on each occasion. The same interes was manifest at the colored school closing exercises. The general opinion of all who witnessed these exhibitions was that publi schools were a fixed institution, and indis pensable in the city of Richmond. CONDITION OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR THE demand Superintendent Peay obtained the consent of the Board to open in the crowded districts half-day schools for the lowest grade of scholars. Experience thus far demonstrates the utility of the plan. The children are only kept in school three hours per day, and the NECESSARY work of the grade is accomplished in that time.

SUPERINTENDENT JAMES H. BINFORD. Superintendent J. H. Binford, who had long suffered with a chronic complaint (rheumatism of the heart), under advice of his physician left the city June 29th to spend the vacation at the Red Sulphur Springs. COLORED HIGH- AND NORMAL-SCHOOL. Under a previous agreement with the Richmond Educational Association R. M. Manly, Esq., president, the School Board accepted, in behalf of the city of Richmond, a deed of gift of the valuable school-building and lot, together with the furniture and school apparatus, valued at $25,000. The conditions of this gift are that this school shall be maintained by the city as a highschool for colored children.

The economy of the plan is self-evident, one teacher having charge of as many scholars as formerly constituted two schools, at an additional cost of only ten dollars per month to the salary of teachers so employed. Four of these schools are now organized and are doing satisfactory work.
